Cyclic Nucleotides And Therapeutic Perspectives

Summary. Cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDEs) degrade the second messengers cyclic adenosine monophosphate (cAMP) and cyclic guanosine monophosphate (cGMP), thereby regulating multiple aspects of cardiac and vascular muscle functions. This highly diverse class of enzymes encoded by 21 genes encompasses 11 families that are not only responsible for the termination of cyclic nucleotide signalling, but are also involved in the generation of dynamic microdomains of cAMP and cGMP ...

Cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases in heart and vessels ...

Cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases play a critical role in intracellular signalling by selectively hydrolysing the second messengers cAMP and cGMP that control cAMP- and cGMP-regulated proteins and transcription factors.

Perspectives for future therapeutic developments

Cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDEs) that specifically inactivate the intracellular messengers cAMP and cGMP in a compartmentalized manner represent an important enzyme class constituted by 11 gene-related families of isozymes (PDE1 to PDE11). Downstream receptors, PDEs play a major role in controlling the signalosome at various levels of phosphorylations and protein/protein interactions.

Indicated by a series of recent studies, cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDEs) may represent a promising class of therapeutic targets for alcohol-related disorders. In mammals, PDEs are the only known enzymes that catalyze the hydrolysis of the cyclic AMP (cAMP) and cyclic GMP (cGMP).

Cyclic Nucleotide Gated Channels (CNGCs) in Plant signalling-Current Knowledge and Perspectives Cell signaling is an evolutionarily conserved mechanism that responds and adapts to various internal and external factors. Generally, a signal is mediated by various signaling molecules and is transferred to a cascade of effector proteins.

Halothane, in anesthetic concentrations (0.6-1.8 volumes/100 ml), produced a dose-dependent decrease in myocardial cyclic AMP (cAMP) content and an increase in cyclic GMP (cGMP) content in mice exposed to a continuous flow of the anesthetic carried in air for 15 min. Atropine (up to 20 mg/kg i.p.) did not alter significantly the myocardial cyclic nucleotides content or the effect of halothane ...
