Euroscepticism In Southern Europe A

Euroscepticism, also spelled as Euroskepticism or EU-scepticism, means criticism of the European Union (EU) and European integration. It ranges from those who oppose some EU institutions and policies, and seek reform (Eurorealism, Eurocritical, or soft Euroscepticism), to those who oppose EU membership and see the EU as unreformable (anti-European Unionism, anti-EUism, or hard Euroscepticism).

Euroscepticism seems to be relatively new, but it is not a recent phenomenon. These attitudes have always been present since the European Integration process began, following different paths in the different Member States. Ray's analysis of how Euroscepticism took different forms in UK, France and Italy is particularly telling.

There is also broad agreement that mass media contribute to democratisation processes, as seen for example in Eastern Europe during and after the Soviet Union's collapse. By contrast, there is a great deal of controversy when it comes to the issue of whether free mass media serve or harm democracy once it has been established.
